The Inca copied off Chinese customs.
The Inca borrowed their practices

- ① Treating rulers as divine god-kings who were worshipped even after death
- ② Having descendants inherit ruler's estates (a custom that forced new kings to gain wealth through conquest); and
- ③ Distributing massive amounts of finely worked gold, silver, and textiles to members of a small ruling class

The Incas' long range projectile was the slingstone. Good wood for bows and arrows did not grow in the nearly treeless heights.
Step mountainsides were terraced with stone retaining walls to grow CORN and POTATOES (the Andean's greatest gift to humankind).

Pachacuti decreed that everyone speak QUECHUA (today the language of 12 M ± people

Hanging was the usual mode of executions in England, done publicly and causing death by strangulation, not, as now, by fracture of the cervical vertebrae. The death penalty was inflicted for many crimes besides murder.

The corpse of the dead malefactor was left suspended as a warning to the living until the crows had rendered it unrecognizable.

Sometimes, decapitation, drowning, or prostration from a cliff were used.
